

PLANNING TIMES

*Come gather 'round planners
Wherever you plan
And admit that your plans
Around you have grown
And accept it that soon
You'll be planning a-new
If your job to you
Is worth savin'
Then you better keep plannin'
Or you'll get in deep water
For the cities they are a-changin' ...*

The relationship between space and time has been formulated in the most diverse planning theories and has fascinated mankind from the beginning. When planning our cities, when defining projects that may improve the conditions of our society, when proposing decision processes that manage the space around us, when implementing techniques to foster development – the relationship between space and time is something we are constantly working with.

In May 2013, REAL CORP will explore the relationship between time and space, and how the planning practise and theory relates itself to this complex synergy. Time and space work on different scales, dimensions and topics – and confront us with questions such as:

- How to plan taking into account time, both past history and future development?
- How to integrate monitoring within the planning decision processes, such as in the case of natural disasters?
- How to handle time that cannot be planned, such as long decision processes or real time decisions?
